A verse from the poet Wilfred Owen, who was killed in the First World War at the age of 25, a week before the Armistice in 1918:

Comforted years will sit soft-chaired
In rooms of amber;
The years will stretch their hands, well cheered
By our lives' ember.

THE SCARF (In Memory of my Mother)

We do not grieve
Like those who have
No hope

But we mourn
All the same
And weep like Jesus

For death is loss
To those who remain
Our letting go
No casual achievement

We labour and ache
For contact
A physical connection

I pick up the scarf
I bought for her
In Paris

Feel the smoothness
Of her skin

The soft scent
Of her perfume
And carry it with me
A year or two
Until the fragrance

Fades away
No longer
Needed
